You're probably wondering what the next step is for you. Karen isn't going anywhere plus Steve is the bosses' favourite.

You're kicking ass and taking names as a senior leader where you are, but something is missing.

It's not just salary, you're already paid well, but you know there has to be something else, but you can't quite put your finger on it, it's like an itch you just can't scratch.

Is it equity?

Is it C-suite?

Is it a clear journey to the board?

Or is it the chance to run the day-to-day operations of a £30m T/O, 130 headcount company, turning the CEO's vision (mad noises in their head) into something sensible.

This company is flying, they just need a bit of help with the whole structure, reporting, leadership piece as they enter their next growth stage.

Oh yeah growth. It's vital you know the difference between sales and growth as you're in charge of taking the company to the next step, but you'll do this by leading the SLT to get the results themselves.

Simple eh???

It's obviously not as that's why you're interested.

You want to make your own mark, take control and run things your way. Be the person people come to for advice and be the CEO's right-hand person.
