Job titles are so annoying in my line of work.

Every employer thinks it means one thing, and every job seeker thinks it's another.

Take this opportunity, the job title might fool you as yes of course you will love all the elements that come with production, but here's the twist, this is actually a leadership role.

With a company that's owned by its employees, run by people who give an actual $hit about the team AND provide a benefits package even an old soak like me was surprised at.

Why is it important to know its employee owned?

As you will have a say in things as a senior leader in the company.

You'll have your voice heard and be part the conversation when it comes to strategic oversight and the way forward.

You'll also lead a team of 7 production managers who are client facing and really, really good at what they do but need a bit of support and that is the fire that rages inside you.

You will bring that spark of energy, the wealth of experience and more importantly, you will want to be the person in charge and responsible for things.

You'll get to stay working in the area you love, whilst also not having to deliver onsite day on day, year on year.

What's not to love?

In return, you'll get to do things your way. No seriously.

Ways of working, managing a team, project deliverables, all of this is for you to drive how you see fit.

You'll grab things with two hands and run things your way.

This £12m TO agency with 66 heads has a great reputation in the industry, but the production department has lost its way a bit, they're feeling a bit unloved and in need of a leader.

That's your cue.

If it's time for you to lead a team and share your knowledge with a wider audience, click apply and let's have a confidential chat. Who knows where it will take you.

Don't worry if your CV isn't up to date, we can deal with that later.

Oh, I also run a £1k recommend a friend scheme, so please feel free to share with your connections.
